MONOPLANE RISES TO HEIGHT OF FORTY FEET

Successful Flight at Benning Yesterday Afternoon by Moore-Simmons Machine.

The best flight that has yet been accomplished by a Washington aeroplane was made yesterday afternoon at Benning race track. The machine was the Moore-Simmons monoplane, experiments with which have been continuing at intervals for several weeks, and lately were interrupted while waiting for heavier wheels to replace those that have been injured in landing. The same ending came to the flight yesterday, but the machine made an altitude of forty feet before it stopped

Donald Moore Operator.

The operator of the machine was Donald Moore, son of the inventor. He has been driving the machine for two days getting used to the mechanism. The chief trouble seems to be with the fore and aft balance. The machine was sent down the track yesterday evening about 6:15. Moore was at the wheel. The engine was opened up wide, as has not usually been the case in practice, and the monoplane jumped forward and darted into the air. An altitude of forty feet was reached, as stated, but after a short flight Moore found that he was having trouble with his fore and aft balance, as has occurred several times before. He cut out the engine for a glide down, but there was diffi culty in making the landing, and the ma

J. H. Smidley, the designer of another monoplane, was at the track. He has almost completed the repairs to his engine, but made no attempt to fly.
